Stunning photos accentuate the charm of this Panhandle town. Seaside, the most successfully planned city of recent years, requires picket fences. Each must be of a different design.

From the Back Cover"Seaside teaches us that there is another kind of growth--growth that occurs in concentrated, walkable settlements instead of an endlessly dispersed sprawl."--The Boston GlobeSeaside is a world-famous Florida Panhandle town created by renowned planning pioneers and architects. This fascinating, beautiful example of urban design has been praised by everyone from expert journalists to England's Prince of Wales. Developed around the fundamental idea that a community is forged by social, pleasant design, the Seaside code decrees that all structures have a picket fence. The fences that range so dazzlingly in form and style are required for their aesthetic appeal and their unique ability to define communal space. Steven Brooke captures them in stunning detail in the photographic journey Seaside Picket Fences.About the AuthorSteven Brooke, an internationally acclaimed architectural photographer, received the National Honor Award for Photography from the American Institute of Architects. His beautiful, detailed photographs of Natchez also grace the pages of Pelican's The Majesty of Natchez Postcard Book. His other books include Seaside and The Gardens of Florida, both published by Pelican. An adjunct professor of architectural photography and composition at the University of Miami School of Architecture, Brooke lives with his son in Miami, Florida.
