But, unless you have access to tons of manure or a good quantity of already distilled salt peter, you aren't going to make much of it. I like thinking about how this was discovered in the first place, and that's covered in this book. This isn't rocket science, but it's not totally simple either. You could accidentally blow yourself up if you weren't careful. This won't be 'smokeless' powder either. This will make the 'fog of war'. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Awesome Survival Resource By DWM Gunpowder is relatively simple to make, and a true advantage in any survival situation. That said - "how do you get the materials needed to construct gunpowder once the grid has gone down". The author provides a history of the process and details various ways to obtain the necessary items directly from nature. Of course, none of these methods are easy, but they are all doable. This was a great little book and should be a welcome addition to any survival library. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. a very interesting read in my opinion By gary This is a very interesting read in my opinion. It gives some actual ways to make gunpowder - though I believe you would have to be a die-hard study of self sufficiency and a "prepper" to actually do any of the recipes given.

Learn how to make gunpowder from such items as dead cats, whiskey, your living room ceiling, manure and maple syrup with simple hand tools and techniques that have been used for centuries. This is a practical and safe approach to making the oldest propellant/explosive known. For information purposes only.
