Book by Pijawka, K. D.

From the Back CoverThe Environmental Showcase Home demonstrates how principles of sustainability can be applied to new home construction. Built by Arizona Public Service Company, Arizona's largest public utility, to provide home buyers and homebuilders with resource-efficient design and product ideas, the home takes its place in the current movement of "green homes" in the United States and Canada. This book looks at the Environmental Showcase Home and its relationship to regional environmental homebuilding in the Southwest. Each chapter is illustrated with graphs and tables. Full-color photographs taken during the home's construction show important resource-efficient features that were designed for the home by the architects of Jones Studio, Inc., of Phoenix. An appendix lists all materials and products in the home and explains their environmental benefits.About the AuthorK. David Pijawka is Professor at the School of Planning and Landscape Architecture and Associate Director of the Center for Environmental Studies, Arizona State University. Kim Shetter is an editor for the Herberger Center for Design Excellence. She holds a master's degree in environmental planning from Arizona State University.
