Theatrum Arbitri is a literary study dealing with the possible influence of Roman comic drama (comedies of Plautus and Terence, theatre of the Greek and Roman mimes, and fabula Atellana) on the surviving fragments of Petronius' Satyrice. The theatrical assessment of this novel is carried out at the levels of plot-construction, characterization, language, and reading of the text as if it were the narrative equivalent of a farcical staged piece with the theatrical structure of a play produced before an audience. The analysis follows the order of each of the scenes in the novel. The reader will also find a brief general commentary on the less discussed scenes of the Satyrice, and a comprehensive account of the theatre of the mimes and its main features.

"His complete study, focussing primarily on mime elements but also considering the influence of other theatre performance traditions (especially Roman comedy), has much valuable material to offer" Niall W. Slater, "Bryn Mawr Classical", 1995. "This good-looking book gets full marks for author, editor and publisher for production." Wade Richardson, "Bryn Mawr Classical", 1995. "...useful mines of information...a book for the serious scholar of Petronius who seeks another spotlight on an ancient text." Hans-Friedrich Mueller, "Religious Studies", 1997.
